If everyone would ask themselves the four way motto questions before they spoke, it would make our world a better place. By KASSANDRA BRANDT

The first aspect of the Rotary Four Way Test, "Is it the truth". Before we release some of our thoughts, opinions and ideas we must first think about whether it is true. Hold back on things that are not true. Only let truth pass our lips, this would make the world a better place. The next question is "Is it fair to all concerned". Our expression must be fair not only to others but to ourselves. We need to think about the golden rule, "Treat others the way you want to be treated." If we would pause and think before we speak, this world would be a better place. The third standard of the four way motto is "Will it build Goodwill and better friendships?" When we express ourselves especially in connection with dealing with others it is important to ask if it is the productive thing to do. We should always be looking for ways to build up our fellow man and woman, if we did this, the world would be a better place. The fourth and final question is "Will it be beneficial to all concerned?" We have to ask ourselves if what we are putting out in the world will be beneficial to all or just you. We can not just elevate ourselves, but elevate all around us, so that adjacent possibilities will happen. By using this four way motto in our life it will create healthy relationships, communities, and I do believe, this world would be a better place.
